As the first specialist private prosecution firm in the UK, Edmonds Marshall McMahon focuses on high-value, complex and international fraud prosecutions, with a bespoke service to protect companies' commercial rights and assets through use of criminal law. Intellectual property prosecutions are handled together with politically sensitive matters, perverting the course of justice cases, judicial review, counterfeiting and blackmail.

Founded in early 2012, Edmonds Marshall McMahon remains the only specialist private prosecution law firm in the country. The three founding partners are all extremely experienced prosecutors who have handled some of the largest criminal matters ever litigated in the UK. These include HMRC's largest and most strategically important excise duty fraud (Andrew Marshall), the largest ever counterfeit medicines case prosecuted by the Department of Health (Tamlyn Edmonds) and one of the largest SFO bribery and corruption cases, brokering the first criminal global settlement which resulted in a $12.7m fine in the UK and a $14.1m fine in the US (Kate McMahon).

The firm prides itself on offering innovative solutions to victims of crime. It values flexibility, high quality preparation and commercially astute solutions. The investigations that it supervises, undertaken by professional and reputable investigators, are focused, time-efficient and always result in well-prepared cases. The practice won the prestigious 2014 The Lawyer 'Boutique Law Firm of the Year – City' award.

Edmonds Marshall McMahon prides itself on being a firm that says 'yes' more than it says 'no'. It is a firm to which other lawyers can safely and confidently refer their clients. The firm ethos is to always push boundaries but never take unwarranted risks. Above all, it always strives to achieve the result that its clients want.
